

Intentional and Prophetic

Nursery children are often intentional and prophetic in their own ways, even from a young age. When they choose a toy or activity, they are making purposeful decisions that help them explore, learn, and develop new skills. Their curiosity drives them to ask questions, solve problems, and try new things, showing a deep sense of potential. Even in play, they are often guided by an inner sense of purpose, whether it's building something with blocks, telling a story, or helping a friend. In these small moments, children show both intentionality in their choices and prophetic glimpses of the skills and abilities they are developing for the future.

Curious and Active

In our nursery class, the children are always curious and full of energy. They love exploring everything around them, from the sensory table to the building blocks, and are always asking questions or discovering new things. Whether they're splashing in the water, creating towers, or playing with friends, they are constantly moving and learning. Their curiosity helps them solve problems, come up with new ideas, and make exciting discoveries every day. It's amazing to see how active and engaged they are, always exploring the world in their own fun and unique ways!
